The surviving Yenke family members have never filed to obtain a trademark on the Yenke name. That does not mean they have waived their ownership rights to their name. We don't all have to run down and obtain a trademark on our names to prevent others from using it.

However once a trademark is granted it is a tangible property right until someone in this case the surviving Yenke family members go to court and enforce their inherent property rights which will supercede the present trademark rights owned by GMCI.

The Yenke family name is owned by the Yenke family and passed to Don Yenke's heirs upon his death. Until the Yenke heirs lawyer up people will continue to profit off Don Yenke's legacy.

All of which assumes that GMCI or the previous trademark owner hasn't already obtained the rights from the Yenke heirs? But as of September

It should be noted that the sYc net folks who operate this sight have the written permission from the Yenke heirs to use the Yenke name in regard to this site and the registry. I have seen the agreement and as far as I know it is the only time the Yenke family has agreed to allow anyone to use their fathers name. That agreement will supercede any efforts GMCI makes to prevent this site from going forward. Whether or not lawyers are needed to enforce their written permission is another matter. Hopefully

All I can say for now, the sYc is doing business as usual, including putting the finishing touches on YS-1001, the first 2010 Yenko/SC Camaro.

The club's next event will be MCACN in Nov., and we are working with Bob and Vicki to make the sYc display area(s) extra special.

GMCI has some balls to try and trademark the name after the SYC and the Clarys and members are the ones that put the info out there for everyone for years. I've noticed that this hobby the past few years has unfortunately acquired a BUNCH of dirty players. I understand supply and demand but to completely undermine someone and do them like GMCI has done the SYC is just WRONG. Perhaps a big nasty lawsuit isnt such a bad thing as it would send a message to people that like to play these games that the HONEST hobbyists arent screwing around anymore and are tired or doing all the work for years and getting the shaft in the end. Whats next GMCI introduces the lauch of their Baldwin Motion brand??? I know Joel wouldnt have a problem taking legal action. Maybe the Clarys and the YENKO heirs should consider the same. Unless theres a hidden agenda somewhere that the SYC isnt aware of. Just my opinion     Edited by motionwannabe (10/20/09 10:17 AM) Post Extras:

First off I do not think this is legal. Remember the knuckle head from Canada

Second we all can stop this in its tracks. If no one supported them and did NOT even recognize them as being Yenkos then I drought they would last to long . It has to made clear that any car they try to build is NOT a yenko THIS IS WORNG at so many levels I do not know where to began.

AS for me they are nothing more fakes Someone trying to make a quick buck using

The Yenke name. I have been a judge in many car shows this year, Me if I saw one

I would have NO problem classing them AS FAKES

In the classic car world once a car is branded a fake it kills it.

And lastly I do think the way business has been lately that they will end up losing more money than made

I also found it interesting while browsing the Patent & Trademark Office web site (I have a low threshold of entertainment) that GM has a Trademark application pending for the word "COPO". On 11/03/2006 GM filed an application for "Intent To Use" the word "COPO". If you know you want to use a word in the future as a trademark but are not currently using it you file an "Intent To Use" application. You also have to tell the P&TO what you intend to use the trademark for. GM has been given a third extension of time to file a "statement of use". I guess they don't want anybody to know how they plan on using the word COPO or maybe they don't know yet.

Some would argue that not if their name changed after marriage. Is the Yenka name still around or has it been "married off"? Any sons? I really don't think the daughters had an open line of communication with Vince Piggins like their father did so that takes a lot of mystique away from the idea of a "Little Susie Yenka Camaro".

Hum..so if married, daughters cannot continue the family business/traditionlegacy, but sons can? I bet Valerie (Harrell) Vanderwoude and Connie (Gibb) ?, among other daughters of famous people will love to hear that.

Until just recently, when they sold their interest in Yenka Honda, the daughters had been very involved in the business side of things, taking over for Don following his untimely death in 1987.

And though I have yet to meet Terri, I do know that Lynn shares her dad's passion for cars.

My arguement is simply that GMCI shouldnt be the ones doing it.If the SYC and the Clarys are doing it thats fine because of all the site and that particular family has done to keep the YENKO flame alive. Did Jeff Leonard start a YENKO site and bring owners of vegas,camaros,novas vettes chevelles together and help them to track down the info on their cars? My guess is NO. If this is going to be done it should be done by those who love the car and arent doing it to simply reap profits. I believe the Clarys and the SYC would do it for their passion of YENKO. Sure they will make money but its not their sole intent.

If only one person can be "Yenko" then no doubt it would be the person who had the vision to open the original Yenko Chevrolet dealership, remaining a figure head until Yenko Chevrolet was sold, was willing to sign on the dotted line for 100 1966 Corvairs, sign another agreement with GM to purchase 500 COPO cars in 1969, and in 1973 relocated to a new, state of the art ($$$) facility in nearby McMurray, etc. That person? Frank Yenko, with the support of wife Martha.

Don, their only son, simply followed in his parent's footsteps, adding his vision to the mix, same as his daughters, maybe grandchildren, are wanting to do, same as Bill Thomas, Joel Rosen's family, Nancy and Connie Gibb, Valerie Harrell and others are doing.

It will be interesting how much different the new yenko stripes look vs what hennesy has done on their camaros (they look same).

I feel if the new 'yenkos' do not involve GM and some form of copo aspect, its not true to form. To me, anyone can make a new yenko, but if you got GM to do something special, its a real step in the right direction of re-inventing images of some of these super cars of the past. I have a friend that has one of those 2002 camaro berger cars, and I like the way GM put their finger print into that effort, and thus should be the example how these new 'yenkos' should follow. GM should still have an idea of what Yenko was all about too, they seemed to get the berger thing.

What muscle car/s do you own now. Have you ever owned a 67, 68,69, 70, or 80 Yenko. 🤖

This car is a tribute to Don period, and that is what this site and members are all about. The SYC people behind this project have the passion, desire and knowledge to produce a fantastic car. To condemn this project is way out of line.

It will be interesting how much different the new yenko stripes look vs what hennsey has done on their camaros (they look same).

I feel if the new 'yenko's' do not involve GM and some form of copo aspect, its not true to form. To me, anyone can make a new yenko, but if you got GM to do something special, its a real step in the right direction of re-inventing images of some of these super cars of the past. I have a friend that has one of those 2002 camaro berger cars, and I like the way GM put their finger print into that effort, and thus should be the example how these new 'yenkos' should follow. GM should still have an idea of what Yenko was all about too, they seemed to get the berger thing.

my 2 cents.

If you actually take the time to compare stripe packages, I think you will see they are different.

What did GM do to make the Berger 2002 cars special? I thought an outside source modified them.

It is very interesting that the ONLY people who have contacted us regarding building them a 2010 Camaro in the Spirit of that which Don Yenko built, in the '60,'70 & '80s are Enthusiasts who own Vintage Yenko cars they would like to commemorate and drive or race on a regular basis.
